Simply stated, we provide opportunities for residents and staff to connect with themselves, each other, the campus, the Carolina culture, the community, and ultimately the world around us. The more we understand ourselves and others, the better we are able to support our students.

Our students come from various diverse background, cultures, and communities. They are of different races, religions, ethnicities, sexual orientations, genders, abilities, and socio-economic status. They bring with them a multitude of perspectives and experiences to be further developed and shared.

We must reflect who our students are. We must emulate what we want our students to be. We must support and encourage the exploration of our differences. This is who we are, and this is who we seek in building our team... Those dedicated to and reflective of our values, our vision, and our team."
